SAT PROGRAM

Most colleges/universities still ask for SAT Scores. It remains a key part of the college-application process. Each institution has its formula when calculating the overall criteria of a prospective student. Most colleges recognize an unhealthy obsession with test results. The proliferation of test prep courses and tutoring for the SATs has been steadily adding stress to an already stressful application process. Colleges are increasingly concerned that as more affluent students avail themselves of costly test preparation, they are gaining an unfair advantage over others. As a result, a big jump in SAT scores from one test to the next may be attributed to tutoring rather than other factors.
